Hi I have a suggestion. What if you differentiate from a policy perspective flags and decorations that are directly linked to the classroom instruction versus those that are not. If you have a social studies class for example that's going to have a bunch of different flags that's fine. Same for a French class for example might have the flag of France or something. But why should a math class have the flag of France or Russia or a black lives matter flag or anything like that? Meaning that if it's not directly tied to the curriculum instruction of that class then it is political in nature and requires approval

Ok thanks Omar. I'll look at that.
